Lewis Miller Memorial Accounting Scholarship

Education was always the most important goal for Lewis Miller. He grew up in extreme poverty but loved learning. He seldom had money for books in the days when even in elementary school students had to purchase their own books and supplies. From the time he was six years old he worked odd jobs to earn a few cents for books. He saw education as the key out of poverty. After school, he was trying to earn money to go to college when he was drafted into the army. He was a sergeant in during World War II fighting in the Pacific Theater from 1941 – 1945. With the G.I. Bill, he was able to enroll in the Business College and became an entrepreneur the rest of his life. In the late 1940s, he opened one of the first stores selling the new phenomenon – television – in Illinois and later in Indiana. He later started an insurance agency and built it from scratch to become the second largest agency in the state of Indiana. He was always active and a leader in his community and a role model to others.
